

I am opposing the weakening of Indiana's law concerning the Indiana's Telephone Privacy law with regard to attempting to impose the federal "established business relationship" exemption on Indiana consumers. The disruption of these calls affects my privacy and time taken away from my family. I am appalled that the credit card companies, long distance carriers and banks would even be allowed to have this considered again.

I have tried everything, caller i.d., privacy phone line, and anything else I can consider to have this practice stopped. I won't tolerate this action being considered to the point if I have to yank my home phone service out, I will. Do Indiana residents have to result to this? I should think not!

Please consider my comments concerning the FCC opposing the weakening of Indiana's law.

I remain sincerely yours,
